The geometric form drawing has errors or the elements do not create the illusion of form.	There is evidence that the artist was able to create geometric forms via connecting triangles and square perfectly at the corners. The geometric forms take up less than 40% of the composition.	There is evidence that the artist was able to create geometric forms via connecting triangles and square perfectly at the corners. The geometric forms take up around 60% of the composition.
The color in the background lacks effort.	There is evidence that the artist was able to paint the background with a value that was too dark or light. The background has a layer of paint but the canvas is showing through. The paint is too rough.	There is evidence that the artist was able to paint the background a middle value 5 or 6 to allow the darks and light areas to contrast the background. The background is fully painted so no canvas is showing through. The paint covered smoothly and there is not too much modeling (roughness)
The color geometric forms lack effort.	There is evidence that the artist struggled to create a variety of different values of the main color. Some of the planes blend together. The planes are not fully covered. There are white spots where the canvas shows through. The planes have not been tinted or shaded with a dark or light glaze.	There is evidence that the artist was able to create a variety of different values of the main color to paint the planes of the geometric form. The planes are fully covered.
